NEW YORK, Sept. 22.

WALL STREET.

Yesterday was the most exciting in Wall street for many months, both in the gold room and at the Stock Exchange. The Vanderbilt party has been operating for a decline in the stocks of the New York Central, and soon two months ago the Commodore sold short a large amount of Central and Hudson, with sorry discomfiture. It advanced the stock, and there was a slight fall when it was found that the speculation had not come off immediately. This game has been played about once a week for two months, and Old Corncob and Vanderbilt have so largely of each operation. Yesterday many of them sold short through their brokers, and others sold privately for a few individual last. Various rumors were afloat about the Commodore's health, and it was generally supposed there would be no bear. The morning the call began rather quietly, though there was considerable excitement among those who had sold short. At the Gold Exchange, at 10½, Wall the call was progressing, one of the Vanderbilt party entered the room and began to buy stocks. The effect was instantaneous, and the Vanderbilt party cleared Jay Gould, Daniel Drew and Russell Sage, and Jacob Rothwell had united an opposition party, resulting the dissolution of the Brokers and Commercial Exchanges. The Vanderbilt party, it is said, have made a million in stocks. It is impossible to make an accurate statement. The fall in Erie, New York Central was 24 per cent, and on Hudson 10 per cent. The fall in gold was different. Orders to sales to various parts of the room. Third party, Fisk and Gould selling Erie, and Gould selling Hudson last. Various rumors were afloat about the condition of Commodore Vanderbilt's health. Some said he was dead, others that he was dying, and

THE CASE OF GEORGIA.

There seems to be a disposition in some quarters to hold that the decision of the Supreme Court of Georgia, that persons not eligible to hold office under the Constitution of the United States cannot be elected to the offices mentioned therein, is conclusive, and that the Legislature, like the Executive, is in duty bound to accept the decision of the Court as to the qualifications of its members. We, very respectfully, but decidedly, dissent from this view of their seats. It is true, as a rule, that the Legislature, like the Executive, is an independent department of the law itself, and cannot be controlled by the judicial decisions. If the question arises on the validity of the Supreme Court of Georgia itself, the Legislature, or any other department, as before the subject of the Executive, may, and should, refuse to be governed by the decision. But in the case of a county or municipal officer, the Legislature will pay nothing more than respectful attention to the decision of the Court, but one—but the supreme—of the tribunals established by the Constitution and laws of the State, and from whose decisions there is no appeal. The Legislature will, as before, be the judge of the qualifications of its own members, but it will be governed by the decision of the Court in another direction.

Before the war was declared, in 1861, or perhaps even before the election of Lincoln, the State of Georgia, by a vote of the people, passed an ordinance of secession, and elected delegates to a convention charged with the duty of carrying that ordinance into effect. The convention met, and passed the ordinance, and declared the State out of the Union. Thereupon, the State of Georgia, by the action of its people, in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, ceased to be a State of the United States. The people of Georgia, by the same action, ceased to be citizens of the United States. The State of Georgia, by the same action, ceased to be entitled to any of the rights, privileges, or immunities of a State of the United States. The people of Georgia, by the same action, ceased to be entitled to any of the rights, privileges, or immunities of
